Across the Nation

On any given day, there's a medically-related legal argument taking place in Dallas or Boston or San Francisco. Our law team is there, making sure the best interests of our citizens are represented and protected. The Office of the General Counsel's ten regional offices provide comprehensive legal services in virtually every area of the Department of Health and Human Services' programs. Ranging in size from six to 29 attorneys, these offices prepare pleadings, present oral arguments in Federal district and appellate courts, and handle trial-type administrative hearings on issues such as Medicare, Medicaid, and fraud and abuse. They also provide extensive research and analysis of Federal and state statutes, regulations, case law and Federal documents. Divisions located in the Baltimore-Washington metropolitan area provide the full range of legal support to the Department.
